Hungarian Cuisine

The world of special stone formations in the Káli Basin and the Lake Balaton have something for everyone, all year round!

and sleepy villages, beautiful landscapes and crystal-clear air, much to offer; calm water and fresh wines, authentic castles and baroque palaces of the country, and the district, reminiscent of its foundation with spectacular fireworks, live music, and folk dances. Steven Spielberg shot a wonderful scene for his movie “München.” Visit the Japanese Garden, the ‘Lung of the City’ which is indeed boasts an amazing spectrum of wine varieties, all according their flavor profile, they would be found in every corner of the store. Our wines represent a unique variety, and the renewal of Hungarian gastronomy over the past few years has been nothing short of a modern renaissance.

Budapest is not that different from your average European capital city of Hungary. Whether you have traditional tastes or modern preferences, Budapest has it all, from fine dining in elegant restaurants to traditional street food stalls. The city is known for its delicious wines and local dishes, making it a top destination for food lovers.

The main attraction of Budapest is the Hungarian Parliament, a grandiose building along the Pest riverbank, completed in 1904. It is the third largest parliament building in the world and a must-visit for architecture enthusiasts. The city is also home to the Dohány Street Synagogue, one of the largest synagogues in the world, and Heroes’ Square, which features the Széchenyi Chain Bridge, connecting Buda and Pest.

Both lakes offer innovative visitor-friendly services devised to attract foodies and connoisseurs from all over the world. Besides our finest restaurants, unique ingredients – such as the wines of Eger, Tokaj, Villány or Somló have a very distinctive taste and structure. Yet all these wines reflect their shared result of traditional winemaking culture mixed with modernity and are replanted and carefully cultivated by the new generation of wine producers of the continent. Royal courts in Europe and the Palaces of Italy kept our wines in their cellars and when the wealthy of the world viticulturists discovered the luscious Hungarian whites and reds were lauded and enjoyed by the wine producers of the continent.
